

EU Impact on UK Boardroom

In early April the European Commission published a consultation paper on the corporate governance of listed companies, which has the potential to lead to significant changes in the way UK companies deal with governance.

Listed Company Directors

are cordially invited to a champagne, wine
and canapés
networking evening
hosted by Genius

Chris Hodge is Head of Corporate Governance

at the Financial Reporting Council, the independent regulator responsible for corporate governance and reporting.

He is responsible for updating and monitoring the effectiveness of the UK Corporate Governance Code and related guidance on issues such as risk management and internal control and the responsibilities of audit committees, as well as the new Stewardship Code for institutional investors.

Prior to joining the FRC in 2004 Chris worked in a number of Government Departments.

The EU Corporate Governance consultation paper [Green Paper]

contains proposals on matters such as board composition and diversity, risk management, remuneration and the rights and responsibilities of shareholders.

Chris Hodge is Head of Corporate Governance at the Financial Reporting Council, the body responsible for the UK Corporate Governance Code. If anyone knows what is in the pipeline in the future it is Chris.

Chris is charismatic and knowledgeable and will competently take you through the relevant key areas of the consultation paper and discuss their potential implications for UK listed companies. Chris appreciates the concern Boards have in relation to the influences of Europe and is best positioned to advise you on the FRC's likely stance in the future.

What happens in Europe does impact the UK and this Green Paper is no exception

At Genius Methods we are passionate about continuous improvement of all Boards and encourage companies beyond those impacted by the UK Code to take on board those principles of best practice that are applicable to their business.

Good Boards lead successful companies – which is first?
